

My future life

By Alex Farrens

Veterinarian

I would like to be a small animal Veterinarian, because I love animals and would love to take care of them. But getting into Veterinarian school isn't easy but it is required to be a Veterinarian. Those who graduate do have good job opportunities. 3 out of 4 Veterinarians work in private practice.

Being a Veterinarian isn't easy you have to put in long hours and it's a very noisy work environment. It's also dangerous because you could get bit, scratched, or kicked.

There are lots of employment opportunities out there. In 2006 there were 62,000 Veterinarian jobs. It's predicted that there is going to be a 35% increase in jobs. The average the yearly salary is $84,325 but can be as high as $133,150 and as low as $43,530.

Police Officer

I would also like to be a Police Officer, because I like the idea of protecting people. Although Police work can be dangerous and stressful, they are depended on.

A high school diploma is required and a college degree helps. Jobs are easy to find if your qualified.

You have to work 40 hours a week and work long hours on investigations. You could die or have a good chance to see a dead body.

The chance at getting a job is very good. There were 861,000 jobs in 2006 and is supposed to increase 11% by 2016. Starting salary is $27,310.

Zookeeper

I would also like to be a zookeeper because I love the zoo. You give the animals' toys, food, train them, and nurse them if they are sick. But you do have to work long hours and your outside a lot and you could get eaten.

There are lots of jobs out there for zookeepers. There were 200,000 jobs in 2006 but there are predicted to be a lot more by 2016.

You have to have 2 to 4 years of college or more. You would start out at $11.00 an hour but you can make more.
